

WOMEN CALLED ON TO SHOVEL SNOW; FORCE 8,000 SHORT

Mayor Authorizes Street Cleaning Chief to Draft Workers From Other Departments.

Street Cleaning Commissioner Arthur B. MacStay, needing an army of 12,000 to cope with the extraordinary situation caused by the storm, announced to-day that he would give shovelling jobs to women if they applied and would pay them fifty cents an hour, the same as men, if they made good. Less than 4,000 shovellers are at work.

Mayor Hylan, after a conference with MacStay, authorized him to requisition all available employees of other city departments and put them to work on the streets.

How many men can be obtained by this process is problematical, but the subject is a special order of business at the Sinking Fund meeting this afternoon, and all the department heads were directed to appear there with figures showing how many men each department could supply.

At the same meeting the financial problem arising from the storm was to come up, and MacStay was ready to present an estimate of the money he needs. As a "rough estimate" he said that the figure would probably be in the neighborhood of $150,000.

"In Manhattan we have 1,948 men at work," said Commissioner MacStay. "In Brooklyn there are 831, in the Bronx 317, and about 800 each in Queens and Richmond. These numbers are inadequate, but we have been unable to get more."

"The city pays 50 cents an hour and the snow removal contractors, De Marco, Marone & Simonelli, pay 75 cents. But the high wages paid elsewhere make it almost impossible for us to get men."

One hundred and sixty motor snow plows are at work, and the city has made a formal demand on the street car companies to clear their tracks—which the companies already were straining to do.

Secretary Hart of the Fifth Avenue Association called Commissioner MacStay by telephone to ask whether there was anything the association could do. He made no suggestions. The problem in Fifth Avenue, in any event, is not as acute as elsewhere, for many workmen were on the job there all night.
